ADDITION TO DANIELSON MILL

Cotton Company's Big Structure Practically Completed—Only a Step in Expansion Projected by John and J. Eugene Cochran, the Hustling Owners—gent Johnstone's Big Share in an Industry Continually Pushed with Orders.

(Special to The Bulletin.)

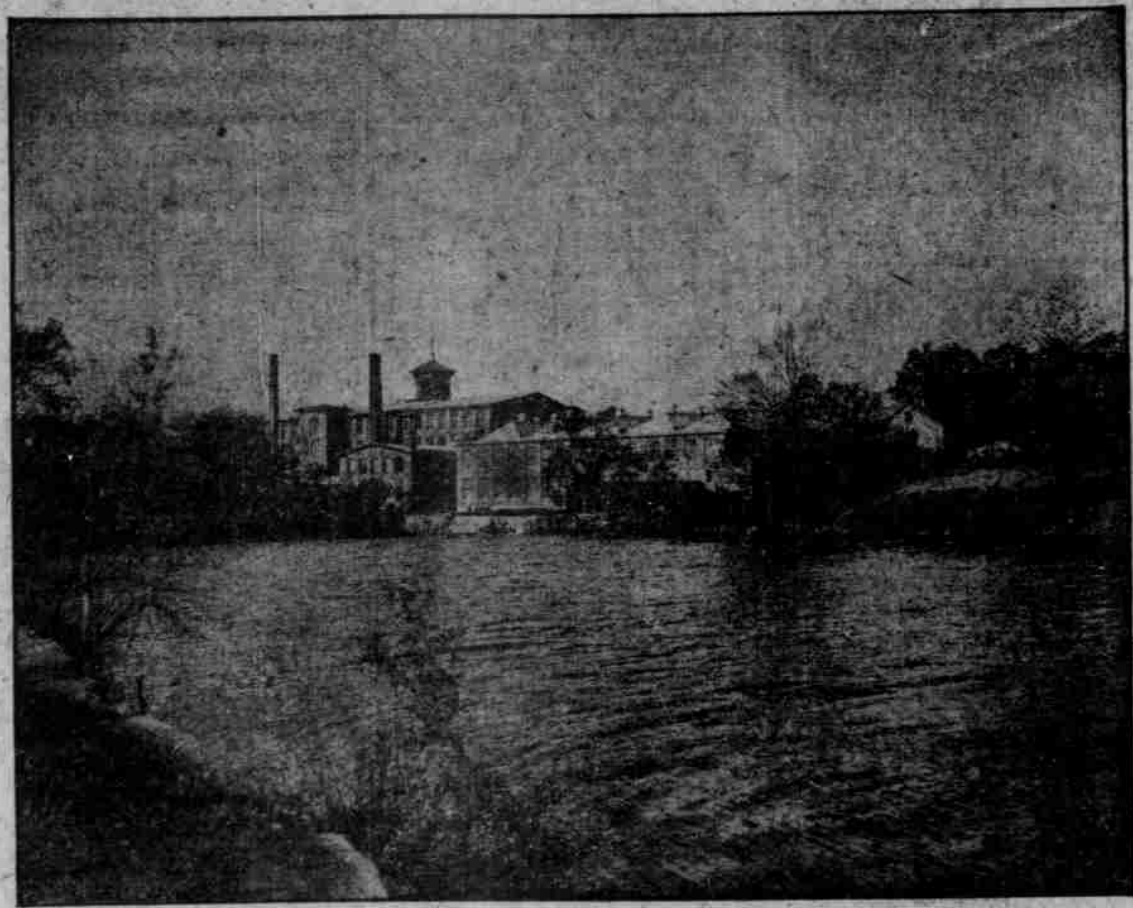

Danielson, June 17.—One more step in the building of a great manufacturing plant that is to mean much to the prosperity of this town has been taken by the Danielson Cotton Company in the erection of the big addition to their mill on Main and Maple streets. For months construction work has been in progress. Of that number a good part are now in operation and others are being added day by day.

The looms are practically all in their places and are being started as rapidly as the machinery can make them ready. A cold water humidifying system has been installed by which the temperature can be varied in a few years of unprofitable and very likely unprofitable management.

There were times when it was not the arrival of the Cochranes marked the beginning of a new order. They took over the property and at once commenced on their policy of improvement and expansion.

Danielson Cotton Company's Plant

been under way and the extension is now completed. The whirl of speeding machinery and the hum of a constantly increasing number of spindles tell a story of progress that is unequalled in the recent record of Danielson's industrial advancement.

Addition 160x160 Feet.

The new part is of brick, 160x160 feet, and two stories high. In every minute from 30 to 70 degrees and an even degree of humidity maintained. Space is also to be found in the new section for the lumber, folders, presses and inspecting department.

Admits Further Expansion.

The building of the addition will relieve the congestion in the old mill and permit greater production. That this extension is but one more step and Nine Prosperous Years.

Nine years have passed since that time. Every one of those years has been marked by some important change.

Old machinery has been replaced by new, old methods have given place to modern methods. From the manufacturing of plain unbleached cotton of medium grades the mill has advanced essential it embraces the best and newest ideas in mill construction. The roof is of the sawtooth kind, an arrangement that allows of the use of a great quantity of glass, through which a flood of light is admitted to the big weave shed which occupies the upper floor. The lower floor is of cement and is given over to carding and spinning. All of the machinery in this new part is electrically driven.

Lower Floor in Use.

On the lower floor all of the machinery is in operation. On the floor above 225 new fancy and Draper looms are not the end of the contemplated expansion is indicated by the fact that the northern end of the addition is built with a temporary blank wall which can be readily removed.

Progressive Owners.

When the present owners, the Danielson Cotton Company (John Cochran, president, and J. Eugene Cochran, treasurer, both of Dedham, Mass.), took possession in 1906 the Sherman mill, the name by which it had been known since its construction in 1862, had been passing through to prominence in the making of the finer and higher grades of fancy cotton textiles.

Sections of the mill that for forty years were occupied by little old style looms, on which were woven the cheap gray cottons, are now occupied by modern Jacquards, with their marvelous capabilities of reproducing in cloth any pattern that can be drawn on paper. Lox and dobby looms have forced out scores of others on which only plain weaving was possible.

Operating Fancy Looms.

Operatives who were incapable of doing any but plain work have been trained to operate the fancy looms on which hundreds of different patterns are being produced. Lace nets, scrims, lawns, dimities, cathedral nets, curtain nets, colored lace, oriental draperies and ladies' fancy handkerchiefs are a few of the things that are being produced.

Heavily napped flannel, baby carriage robes with colored figures of Teddy Bears, Billy Possums and other popular figures, are among the new things that the mill is making for fall.

Rushed With Orders.

Ever and always the pressure of orders has been above the capacity of production. The period of depression made not a whit of difference. The mill ran day and night.

A little old mill across the street from the main plant was pressed into service and filled with handkerchief looms. But still the pressure of orders was beyond capacity. Then came the addition and still more orders.

The mill may be large enough to handle its orders some day, but that day is not yet.

Expenditure of $150,000.

Improvements under way, including the new addition and electric power plant, represent an expenditure of $150,000. The mill has passed from the ownership of the Cochranes.

Lines of cumbersome shafting and heavy gearing have given place to powerful electric motors that drive the machines with watchlike precision.

The change has been remarkable. Everywhere signs of prosperity are in evidence. The capacity of the mill has been greatly doubled, the number of employees and the payroll increasing in corresponding proportion.

Entire Plant Modernized.

And during all this period of transition of the mill from an antiquated to a modern plant the company has found time to make equally marked changes in their dwelling house property.

The big tenement block which occupied part of the site of the new addition was cut in half and moved across the river, was reunited and rebuilt into model tenements. The mill boarding house, also on the site of the new addition, was rolled down onto a Main street site and the Quinebaug bridge and completely remodeled into bright roomy rents. The string of ramshackle houses along Water street that were for years an eyesore to residents of Danielson have been transformed into a line of clean, well kept dwellings.

Practically every piece of mill property has been improved, and the end is not yet.

Brick Houses Projected.

Several new brick dwelling houses are to be erected on Cottage and Water streets, to be occupied by the increased number of employees.

Big Power Plant.

Five miles up the Quinebaug river, above Cotton's bridge, a big electric power plant is in course of construction and a dam is being planned to stretch across the river to hold back the water that is to drive the power developing machines.

The electric current of 1500 horse power will be transmitted to the mill in Danielson over a high tension line.

The Cochranes Power company, recently incorporated. The power plant represents another big investment.

Hints of Big Bleachery.

Every working day of every year is marked by a little progress towards the making of a mighty industry. It is hinted that in the future a bleachery will be built as an adjunct to the present mill, which has not yet reached its greatest development.

Vigilant Agent Johnstone.

The direct supervision of this industry during all its development has been the care of Gordon A. Johnstone, agent of the company. Inside and outside the plant he has closely followed and directed the varied changes, working energy and perseverance that have tested him as fully fit for the strenuous life. It is the commanding officer of the mill's day of workers and the results achieved testify as to his success.

Success a Matter of Local Pride.

As the most important industry within the limits of Danielson, upon it naturally is laid a great degree of local prosperity. Its development therefore is a matter of vital interest to all of the town's people. That such signal success has marked the operation of the plant from the very beginning of the present control is a satisfaction that is shared not by the owners and employees alone, but by all the people.

The big elms in Davis park have been sprayed by W. J. Schoonman to protect them from elm beetles and other pests. The work was thoroughly done by means of a pressure spraying apparatus and a solution containing arsenate of lead.

House Passes Bill for Armory Sale.

It was with pleasure that the announcement that the bill, providing for the sale of Danielson armory to the state, had passed the house, was received here Thursday.

There is an indication that the bill will meet with opposition in the senate, consequently the prospects are that the state will soon own military quarters in this town.

Cut in Head by Ax.

John E. Warren has a bad gash in his head inflicted with an ax while he was chopping for Mrs. Joseph Snow in the cellar of her house. In swinging the ax above his head it struck a floor beam and, rebounding, struck him on top of the head.

Miss Mildred Crumley, who has been attending college in Providence the past year, is spending the summer vacation with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Crumley.

STAFFORD SPRINGS

Centenary of Baptist Church at Hollow—History of a Hundred Years of Growth.

The centennial exercises being held at the Baptist church in Stafford Hollow this week are creating a deep interest and are being well attended. The first meeting toward the organization of this church was held April 20th, 1836 at the house of Samuel Bloss in Stafford Springs. The house, known as the "Bloss house," is still standing. Jacob Leonard was moderator and Samuel Bloss, Jr., clerk of the meeting. Necessary action was taken for convening a council which met June 14th of the same year at the home of Mr. Leonard.

At this meeting, in accordance with the custom of the Baptist denomination, a Baptist church was reorganized.

First Pastor.

It was a small beginning, consisting of only eighteen members, seven males and eleven females. Samuel Bloss, Jr., soon began to preach regularly to the church, and in 1810 was ordained as its pastor. With the possible exception of the West Stafford Congregational church the Baptist is the oldest church in town. Elder Bloss remained as pastor for about three years. Following his pastorate, for three or four years the church had no regular minister. It was about 1819 that Benjamin M. Hill was ordained pastor, but continued in office only two and one-half years. Then came a period of about twelve years of infrequent services. The church had no stated place of meeting until 1834, but the members met for worship at the houses of Samuel Bloss and Jacob Leonard in Stafford Springs. Meetings were also held at the schoolhouse in the village, and at the public house on Stafford street, and once a month in the (then) new meeting house on Stafford street.

Present Prosperity.

The present building, in the Hollow, was probably erected in 1834 and was first used as a place of worship in January, 1835. Twenty years later it was remodelled and an addition for evening and other services was built in 1850. The present pastor is Rev. Albert B. Todd, who has been here for almost three years, and the church is today in a flourishing condition.
